J.L. Wallace Honors Exceptional Employees

FORT MYERS, Fla. (December 14, 2010) –J.L. Wallace, Inc. recognized four employees for their outstanding contributions in 2010. Glenn Cribbett was named the J.L. Wallace “Rookie of the Year”, Ken Furtado, customer care technician/assistant superintendent, received the “Honor Award”, Ted C. Gadoury was named “Superintendent of the Year” and Noel Miranda, project manager assistant, received the “Heart of Gold Award.”

The “Rookie of the Year” award is presented annually to an individual who, upon acceptance of a new position, rises to the occasion and performs beyond expectations. “Glenn joined our team in January as project manager for Royal Corinthian Homes,” said Jerry Wallace, president of J.L. Wallace, Inc. and Royal Corinthian Homes. “He has shown great resourcefulness in fulfilling the responsibilities of his residential position and temporarily expanded his duties to serve as interim superintendent on a large commercial project.”

The “Superintendent of the Year” award recognizes the individual who consistently performs tasks beyond the call of duty as well as completing his responsibilities with superior performance. “Ted has excelled in fulfilling his role as superintendent both in coordinating sub-contractor schedules and maintaining excellent client relationships,” said Wallace.

Recognizing exemplary overall job performance, the “Honor Award” is presented annually to an individual who has consistently gone above and beyond in fulfilling responsibilities and in support of the company. Furtado was honored for his tireless commitment to ensuring that every job meets the highest standards in the industry.

Chosen through staff nominations, the “Heart of Gold Award” recognizes the employee who exemplifies an unselfish and kindhearted spirit at work, with the public and in their personal relationships. Miranda was selected because he demonstrates these qualities with everyone with whom he comes in contact.
